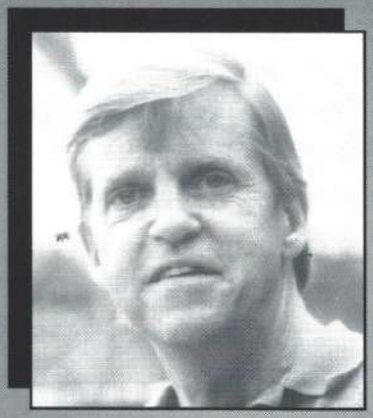
A Season In the Minors

By David Lamb



My minor league career began and ended with the Stockton Ports. It lasted one season. Before you jump to conclusions that my arm gave out or I couldn't hit an inside fast ball, let me explain, because mine was a season stolen from adulthood—a season in the minor leagues that carried me 16,000 miles through America with no responsibilities other than filling my gas tank and finding a ball park.

The assignment I had from Random House was a writer's dream; to write a book on minor league baseball and to find its place in the history and soul of America. So on a hot April morning, on the day the California League season opened, I left my home in Los Angeles to track down the Stockton Ports, who had won more games than any other minor league team in the 1980s. I found them in San Bernardino, followed them north into Bakersfield and back to Stockton. I spent two weeks learning about life in the low minors, then, with snow still covering the Sierra, I turned east and somewhere past Phoenix, home of the Triple-A Firebirds, the California road signs that beckoned me home disappeared and I was in unchartered waters.

The summer was one of discovery for me, and I had to deal with many misconceptions. The first was the notion that playing baseball was an easy way to make a living. It's not. If you count those who never escape the minors, major league clubs spend upwards of $2 million to "develop" a single player for The Show, and the pressure built in this journey is greater than most of us will ever know in our professional lives. Players must succeed and advance to the next level or be gone, their departure marked by nothing more than a one-way plane ticket home. Getting to the top, I quickly learned, it takes as much mental toughness as it does physical talent, because baseball is a game in which failure is the norm.

KEVIN CARPENTER

GENERAL MANAGER

After the dust has settled, out on the field is Kevin Carpenter checking the scoreboard lights in anticipation of another game of runs, hits, and hopefully few errors for the Rainbows. His enthusiasm for baseball is contagious. When you meet Kevin for the first time, you're caught up in the excitement and thrill of the sport that his life revolves around. His home away from home is College Park. Kevin sees this year, and every year, as the start of something new and exciting. His optimism and ready smile belie the hard work and constant hours required to run a ball park smoothly. It takes a true love for the work in order to pull it off successfully, which Kevin has done for the past two years. "Our fans are what make it worth the time and effort that I give to this game." Kevin will be out there in 1991 greeting new fans and looking for the familiar faces from last season.

STEVE GLINER
Assistant General Manager

Yes, Steve survived his first year in Charleston. Coming from up state New York, his expectations about the great weather were correct: It's hot, real hot, but that is not the reason he came to work for the Rainbows. He really likes the area and the people he has met during this past year. This season Steve is getting keyed up about concessions. "We need new freezers and more storage space." These are a few of the things that run through his mind. Then, reality hits and he remembers "Oh yeah, the budget!" So, he takes stock of the inventory and necessities, then starts making changes in the concessions operation so that it will be more efficient for a record breaking season. Steve takes pride in his organizational skills, and his past experience with other sports franchises has made him a valued member of the Rainbows' staff.

DONNA GERKE
Business Manager

It's nice to know that anybody can learn baseball. Donna is here for her second year with the Rainbows, and has acquired some useful knowledge about the basics of baseball. She now calls the "referees" umpires, and knows that "Take Me Out To The Ball Game" is not playing during "halftime". If the game is a tie, she doesn't call it "overtime" when extra innings are played, and she has promised not to ask the Field Manager for tips on gardening or lawn care this year. Donna wasn't hired for her baseball expertise - thank goodness - but is the one who keeps the office running smoothly. On game days she has learned to expect the unexpected. Last minute roster changes, sudden thunder storms, blown fuses, and lost children are just a few of the things that can happen on any given day at the ball park. Donna has proven that she can still keep her cool and deal with problems as they arise. She is looking forward to a 1991 season of new and unanticipated experiences.

Rainbows

April 12, 1991

Welcome to College Park for another exciting South Atlantic League baseball game hosted by your Charleston Rainbows.

The City of Charleston has had a long and rich tradition of baseball. At both the amateur and professional levels. The Rainbows franchise has enjoyed an equally impressive history and has sent a number of youngsters over the years to become standouts in the major leagues. When you combine these two traditions, the result is that College Park should become the place to be in 1991 for clean, affordable family entertainment as well as some pretty darn good baseball.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the citizens, civic leaders and business community of Charleston for their support of Rainbow baseball.

We hope you will come again and again to the ballpark and will afford us an opportunity to make you as welcome as you have made us feel.

Enjoy the Game!

Sincerely,

Marvin S. Goldklang

April 4, 1991

Dear Rainbow Fans:

That special time of the year is here again when we can hear the crack of the bat, listen to the crowd cheer for a home run, join in the excitement as the announcer calls the plays, and have an opportunity to eat hot dogs, popcorn, and peanuts. There is no magic like watching our own Charleston Rainbows hit the field again at College Park for another outstanding season. Bring your family and friends to experience the fun and excitement as we all support our team.

I would like to welcome Dave Trembley and the rest of the new Padres staff to our wonderful city. We all look forward to another exciting year with the hope of the South Atlantic League Title returning to Charleston.

I'll be seeing you at the ball park!

Most sincerely yours,

Joseph P. Riley, Jr.

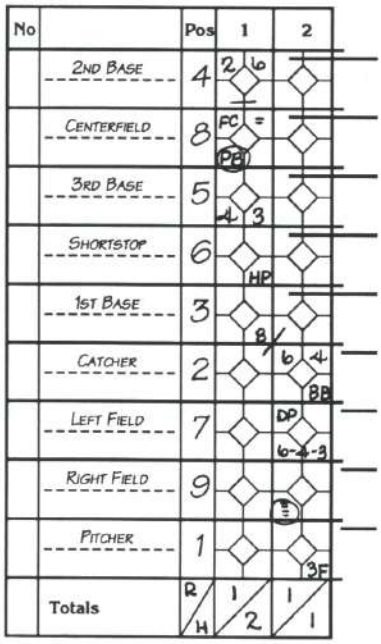
How To Score



Inning #1

4 singled, thrown out stealing (catcher to shortstop)

8 doubled, advanced to 3rd on a fielder's choice, scored on passed ball

5 thrown out (2nd to 1st) - fielder's choice

6 hit by pitcher, too 1st base

3 flied out to center field - end of inning

Inning #2

2 walked, later forced out shortstop to 2nd base (1st half of double play)

7 hit into double play (shortstop to 2nd base to 1st base)

9 hit home run

1 fouled out to 1st base

Use this system of symbols in each batter's individual box on the scorecard to indicate how he was retired or reached base.

Fielding plays, retiring batters or runners call for the use of the number symbols. For example, the batter who grounds our to the third baseman is retired 5-3. If he flied to the left-fielder, you use the number 7.

The lower left-hand corner of the scoring block should be considered as home plate. Progress is made counter-clockwise with progress to first base indicated in lower right-hand corner; to second in upper right-hand corner; to third in upper left-hand corner; and to home in lower left. It is convenient to encircle all runs so that scoring plays may be seen at a glance.

Number Players as Follows:

1 - Pitcher	2 - Catcher
3 - First Baseman	4 - Second Baseman
5 - Third Baseman	6 - Shortstop
7 - Leftfielder	8 - Centerfielder
9 - Rightfielder

Symbols for Play:

—	Single	BK	Balk
▬	Double	K	Strike Out
▬	Triple	BB	Ba9se on Balls
▬	Home Run	FO	Force out
E	Reached base on error	SF	Sacrifice Fly

(Even the best teams lose one of every three games and the finest hitters fail seven times in ten).

I saw one young right-hander pitch several times in Stockton and I happened to be in El Paso the day he was promoted to the Texas League Diablos. He was overjoyed. "That's the big step, to get out of Class A," he said. "The pressure's off now." But I know he was wrong. It had only begun, for minor leaguers are the servants of a dream, a major league dream only one in fourteen will ever realize and the closer they get to fulfilling their goal, the greater the pressure and the obsession.

Having spent most of my life in major league cities, I knew little about the minors when my travels began, but it did not take long to make me a convert. There was an intimacy and informality in the little minor league parks that reminded me of Norman Rockwell's vanishing America, and I felt fortunate to meet tomorrow's stars before they got 900 numbers or peddled their memorabilia on TV.

The ballparks I liked best were the one with nooks and crannies and odd angles and the kind of character a multi-purpose, concrete doughnut can never have. There was the Barons' former home in Birmingham, Richwood Field, where Babe Ruth once hit a ball into a moving freight train that didn't stop until it got to Nashville, 200 miles away. They say it was the longest home run ever hit. There was the Durham Bulls' park in North Carolina, snuggled among tobacco warehouses, and Chattanooga's restored Engel Stadium, where the Lookouts' owner once traded one his players, Johnny Jones. for a turkey, saying the turkey had had a better year. (You can still buy a Johnny Jones turkey sandwich in the stadium's deli).

I lived and worked in a 20-foot mobile home during my stolen season, and by the time I returned to Stockton in late August, on the night the Ports beat San Jose to clinch the Cal League's second-half division championship, my journey had taken be through 15 leagues, from Appalachia to the Pacific Northwest. Fans in the East, I found, are generally more knowledgeable than those in the West, and teams in the South seemed to have the loyalist followings. But I found a universality in baseball that transcended regional nuances. Everywhere I went the language on the field and in the stands was the same, the game itself didn't vary, the players and umpires shared identical aspirations, whether they worked in Oregon or Georgia. That, perhaps, is what binds the sport so tightly to the marrow of our society. In an era of change and uncertainty, baseball is the one institution we can count on to be always the same.

The question I was asked more frequently when I finally got home was, "Who are the best major-league prospects you saw?" It was the one question I didn't have an answer to. I never really made the transition from being a fan to being a student of the game. It was the simple pleasures of the summer I liked best: the atmosphere of the ball park, a well-played game on a warm July night, the elation of fans and athletes when a .240 hitter came off the bench in the ninth inning to win a game with a Kluszewski-esque clout. In my heart, I suppose, I wanted to believe what the ball players themselves did: That they were all prospects.

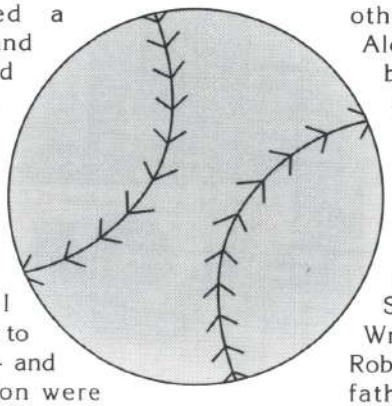
Alomar Learns Lesson About the Big Game

By: Gene Sapakoff, of the Post-Courier

Remind Roberto Alomar of Charleston and 1985 and a smile spreads across his face. Baseball has been good to Alomar, and Alomar good to baseball over the last five years, but the season spent at College Park was special.

It was baseball the way the Alomar family had dreamed it would be, baseball before the end of the innocence.

Sandy Alomar, the former major-league infielder, was a Charleston Rainbows coach that season and sons Roberto and Sandy Jr. were the top prospects on the team. The three were on the field together, shared a Charleston apartment and stayed close on the road trips to Asheville, Macon and other South Atlantic League towns.



"Oh, yes," Roberto Alomar said at Dunedin's Grant Field, spring home of the Toronto Blue Jays, "we had fun that year. I had a good year - I went to the (SAL) All-Star Game - and the people in Charleston were great."

At 23, Alomar already has 497 major-league hits and a .283 career batting average. At the same age, Ryne Sandberg, the best active second baseman and probable Hall of Famer, had 173 hits. Like his father, Roberto is durable, a switch-hitter and good with the glove.

Bill James, in "The Baseball Book 1990", bestowed high praise on Alomar: "there are three great second basemen in history - Joe Morgan, Eddie Collins and Roger Hornsby - and then some guys who are almost in the same class," James wrote. "I think by the time he is through, Roberto Alomar is going to be talked about along with those guys."

Perhaps it was naive of the Alomars to think it would be this way in the major leagues, but "Remember the Alomars" was a slogan repeated often within the Padres' organization. Roberto hoped the threesome would be reunited in San Diego Padres uniforms.

It happened, briefly at the end of the 1988 and '89 seasons when Sandy was a Padres coach, Roberto the starting second baseman and Sandy Jr., a catcher, came up from triple-A for cups of coffee.

The only other time the Alomars have been on the same big-league field was last July in Chicago - the major-league All - Star Game at Wrigley Field. Roberto and his father were there representing the Padres and Sandy Jr. the Cleveland Indians.

Roberto is now playing for the Toronto Blue Jays whose home field is better suited to Alomar's game. "It's easier to play on turf," he said. "You don't have any bad hops, and I'm a line-drive hitter. I hit the ball on the ground and with my speed, maybe I can get more hits."

His father now works for the Chicago Cubs as a minor-league running instructor. His brother Sandy Alomar Jr., was traded to Cleveland before the 1990 season, and was named 1990 American League Rookie of the Year.

How The Game Is Played

Baseball has some measurements that never change, others that vary from site to site.

There are 27.4 meters (90 feet) between each of the four bases. The pitcher delivers the ball to the batter from a hard rubber slab located 18.4 meters (60 feet, 6 inches) from home plate.

Games are scheduled for nine innings. If the team that has been declared the home team is ahead after 8 1/2 innings, the bottom of the ninth inning isn't played. If there is a tie at the end of the nine innings. the game continues until one team is ahead after a complete inning.

No matter where the game is played, it's three strikes and you're out and three outs and you're back in the field. A foul ball - one hit into foul territory - is a strike unless there are two strikes on the batter. Then it doesn't count for anything.

A player has to be tagged out between bases unless he is forced to go to the next base when all the bases behind him are occupied. Then he can be put out by a fielder merely tagging the bag to which the runner is trying to advance. This is known as a forceout.

Baseball strategies are complex. Teams with great pitchers will try to score a run or two early in the game and attempt to hold the lead. Mainly, however, teams try to score runs in bunches early and runs one at a time late in games that are ties or in which the score is close.

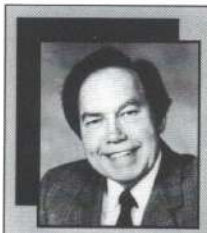
WORDS WORTH REMEMBERING

"Since Baseball time is measured only in outs, all you have to do is succeed utterly: keep hitting, keep the rally alive, and you have defeated time. You remain forever young." - Roger Angell

"A life is not important except in the impact it has on other lives." - Jackie Robinson

"Nobody ever said, "Work Ball!". They say "Play Ball!". To me that means having fun." - Willie Stargell



JOHN HENRY MOSS

SOUTH ATLANTIC LEAGUE PRESIDENT

Thirty two years ago, John Moss founded the Western Carolinas League, and in 1981, the league's name was officially changed to the South Atlantic League.

Mr. Moss suffered through the seventies when the league dropped at one point to just four teams. Today, the Sally league is one of the most desirable "A" leagues in baseball, and Mr. Moss has seen it expand to a record 14 teams.

Mr. Moss received a lifetime contract in December of 1989, the first ever by a league president.

Around College Park there are some new signs and buttons reminding everyone to be a GOOD SPORT. We want everyone to be a winning part of the Rainbows 1991 team. Winners off the field are all GOOD SPORTS.

Four GOOD SPORT rules to remember:

1. GOOD SPORTS always wear their shirts and shoes at the ballpark.
2. GOOD SPORTS never use bad language.
3. GOOD SPORTS know when it is time to buy a PEPSI instead of a beer.
4. GOOD SPORTS always remember that everyone has the right to enjoy the ballgame.

Be a super GOOD SPORT, alert an usher or staff member if someone forgets to be a GOOD SPORT and we will remind them.
Enjoy the game.

Fire one in.
